MORAL MAJORITY

Some colonial townsmen took even more direct action. Organized in societies called Sons of Liberty, they rioted in the large towns and destroyed the offices of stamp tax collectors. They burned stamps in the streets, destroyed the houses of royal officials, and applied tar and feathers to citizens sympathetic to Great Britain. They justified their violent actions by claiming that they were battling for their rights as Englishmen.

In protest against the Tea Act of 1773, members of the Sons of Liberty dressed themselves as Indians and destroyed thousands of dollars worth of tea in Boston harbor.
